Job Description	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Design and development MED system and saturation temperature and pressure• Design and development of the single row type rectangular channel-based heat exchanger• Improving Effectiveness of Heat Exchanger by surface treatment• Optimize the design of heat exchanger for higher effectiveness and lower fouling• Variable stages of MED system according to the variation in affecting parameter
10.	Brief description of Project	Development of Multi-effect desalination (MED) plant:- In the remote villages in Jodhpur/Barmer districts, supply of electricity and drinking water is inadequate. However, these areas have well distributed sun's energy. Solar thermal has a higher initial cost than solar PV and lower thermal efficiency than coal based thermal power plants. However, these drawbacks can be overcome by combining solar thermal power with a desalination system. Moreover, these will work as stand-alone units and solve two problems (i.e. water and electricity) at the same time.

		The technology will be used for electricity generation and production of drinking water to minimise the wastage of thermal energy. Solar concentrating dish with additional energy storage allows uniform electricity and drinking water production from solar energy throughout the day.
